

Editorial

As we all know now, ISVS is going from strength to strength. With the ISVS 6 to be held in Cyprus, we have made a significant transformation from a regional seminar to a global event attracting participants from across the world.

ISVS e journal has also made significant progress where we now receive unsolicited papers of high quality and a line up ready to see a continued publication.

I am grateful to all authors, who have made great efforts in facing the numerous editorial demands in submitting them to harsh deadlines imposed often to ensure a timely publication. As usual, ISVS advisors and specially Prof. Pratyush Shanker has been constantly guiding us as to the next steps and together we intend to transform this to one of the outstanding journals reporting studies on vernacular settlements.

I look forward to your continued support and participation in the journal and our bi-annual conference.

Ranjith Dayaratne, editor-2012.
